NCAHA Membership

NCAHA commenced a membership campaign in August this year with the intention of substantially growing our membership numbers over the next two years. As of today, our numbers stand at just over 240, up from 180 at the beginning of July. Our ambition is to reach a figure of 500 or more by mid-2027. At this level, our membership would constitute around 20% of the total number of AHPs living and working on the North Coast. This would give NCAHA greater validity in representing the issues of allied health professionals and more power to improve the quality of, and access to, allied health services for all communities in our region.

To continue to build our membership, we know we must provide value for members, specifically “Why would I join NCAHA, what are the benefits?” For this reason, we have been working hard over the past couple of years to expand our services and activities in four main areas:

1. Advocating for better services where there are currently allied health gaps or deficiencies
2. Providing regular news and networking opportunities for North Coast AHPs
3. Offering regular high-quality CPD events across the North Coast footprint
4. Promoting better integration of care between sectors and between health provider categories

We believe we are making worthwhile progress, but our membership will always guide us in what we are doing well and where we can improve.

We value our members and their ability to support us in our growth. So if you know someone who isn't a member or want to encourage others to join us as allies in advocating for allied health feel free to share this link to join.

Thank you,
Rob Curry – Executive Officer, NCAHA

Warm regards,

Alira Bayndrian on behalf of

Sarah Crook: Occupational Therapist, Clinical Educator, Director at NCAHA

Reporting on attendance at Indigenous Allied Health Australia (IAHA) Conference, Sunshine Coast

Sarah lives with her family on a macadamia farm in the Alstonville area. She is an occupational therapist with more than 20 years' experience working across multiple sectors, and is currently a clinical educator at the University Centre for Rural Health (UCRH) in Lismore. She is also a Director on the Board at NCAHA.

Sarah was delighted to attend the IAHA Conference held recently on the Sunshine Coast. Sarah felt the best way to introduce the Conference is in the words of IAHA itself.

"The IAHA National Conference recognises the diversity of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples, the diversity of our membership, as well as interdisciplinary actions within the allied health sector. IAHA recognises how sustained holistic, strengths-based approaches to health and wellbeing can achieve health equality for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples." (IAHA, 2025)

Key themes Sarah picked up at the Conference included: self-determination, resilience, reciprocity, allyship, community led, safety, and, of course, 'deadly'. To summarise these, Sarah has constructed the following graphic using Wordificator.

Sarah loved the relaxed and informal nature of the Conference: "It wasn't like your usual professional forum. There was a relaxed vibe, a community feel and lots of conversation and yarnning."

created with wordificator.com

Sarah identified key takeaways from the Conference being the importance of continuing to emphasise the health inequities that still exist for Aboriginal communities, and the need for non-Aboriginal health providers to practice with cultural awareness and humility and to look for community engagement in seeking solutions to health challenges.

She noted two very special presentations: one keynote from Karen Diver, President for Native American Affairs, University of Minnesota, Fond du Lac Band of the Lake Superior Chippewa. The other was a presentation from Andrea Kelly, Interim First Nations Aged Care Commissioner. Andrea highlighted that Indigenous Australians do not access aged care at an equitable rate. Together we need to seek solutions to support older people to "age with dignity on country surrounded by family."

In reflecting on the Conference, Sarah has some questions for NCAHA:

"Are we as an Association adequately connecting with Aboriginal organisations in our region, particularly the Aboriginal community-controlled health services?"

"Are we advocating strongly enough for improved services and better health outcomes, especially given the on-going poor health profiles of Aboriginal communities on the North Coast compared to the rest of the community?"

These appear as fundamentally important questions, and provide a challenge for NCAHA to re-double our efforts going forward.

Sarah noted an important petition that was circulating at the Conference, Petition · Call for the Commonwealth to fund IAHA to sustainably create transformative change - Australia · Change.org, and she would encourage NCAHA members to sign this petition to the Commonwealth.

She also highlighted some key resources which may be of benefit to NCAHA members, as follows:

- IAHA cultural responsive training Cultural Responsiveness Training - Indigenous Allied Health Australia
- Indigenous Allied Health Australia - Make a difference... be an allied health professional supporting workforce development, and offering career pathways for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

- Gayaa Dhuwi, the national peak body for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander social and emotional wellbeing, mental health, and suicide prevention
- Home Page - Australian Indigenous HealthInfoNet, an online resource with links to information to support evidence informed culturally meaningful supports
